Part II: Transhumanism

By: Torben Riise, PhD

Some people call transhumanism one of the world's most dangerous ideas.

Based upon the premise that the human species in its current form does not represent the end of our development as a species but rather a comparatively early step on our evolutionary path, transhumanists embrace the idea of Man-Machine hybrids that overcome limitations in our health, strength, intellect, and even life span. It will be argued that a modified human species is much closer to reality than we imagine.

This raises issues of serious ethical consequences for this possible future – one that will amaze you as much as it will scare you.
